Please indicate which of the following types of build you may be interested in: (Tick as appropriate)

- Contractor built one-off home – This is the most common form of self-build. The home owner manages the design process including finding the land, hiring a consultant and securing planning and building regulations approval.
- Self-built one-off home – An individual purchases a plot of land and builds a house to live-in. They may do all or some of the build themselves, or employ a builder, architect and in some cases a project manager to oversee the build.
- Kit or Pack Home – The buyer/owner selects a home from commercially available kits; the kit company then manufactures the home in their factory before bringing it to the site and putting the kit together.
- Developer-built one-off home – The owner finds a developer with a site and a design that meets their requirements, and the developer then builds it for them.
- Independent Community Self-Build – A group of people come together to design and develop a custom build housing development which they then live in. They may build this themselves or with help from a developer to manage the project.
- Supported Community Self-Build – A local landlord or community self-build agency helps a group of people build a number of homes which they then live in. They may build this themselves or with help from a developer to manage the project.
- Developer built one-off home or developer led group project – A developer divides a larger site into individual plots and provides design and build advice to purchasers. This gives people the chance to tailor existing housing designs to suit their needs.
