

Matter 10, Action 120

Note from KKP to explain why some sites are recommended to be protected even when they may fall short of the quality/value threshold.

A site rating low for quality/value should not automatically be viewed as being fit for development. It is also necessary to understand its value, access, and role within the community it serves (explored through accessibility mapping and quantity levels). It may for example be the only site serving an area or the area may have a quantitative shortfall and should therefore be considered important and potentially a priority for protections/enhancement.
