Morning Karen,

Following on from our conversation yesterday, please see the below from Bill Worthington:

We will put some provisions in our risk assessment and method statement for the project. Our products are inert when cured and pose no risk to the environment once installed. Also our materials are porous and should not affect the drainage in any way once installed. I will be allowing for measures on the method statement to allow for containment of any materials used when mixing to prevent any spillage. Storage of unused materials will be contained also to avoid any risk of contamination to outside environment.

I hope this helps, but I have been made aware that we can make a start on the risk assessment and method statement today if these would help further?

Kind regards,

Leah Kromholc | Sales Manager
